

PROPOSED DRAFT PUBLIC FUNDING OF POLITICAL PARTIES BILL, 2008

BACKGROUND

Political parties are the heart and soul of a democracy. In the case of Ghana's budding multi-party democracy, political parties perform key roles such as the formation of the government, grooming leaders at the national and sub-national levels and holding government accountable (when they are in opposition) among others.

Yet, political parties are among the most neglected of the political institutions of state. They are made to operate as if they are purely private organisations with no state or national interest in their establishment, maintenance, wellbeing and extinction. By their very nature, poorly established and poorly maintained political parties produce poor quality leadership, both at the party level and at the government level.

For these reasons, it is important to ensure that political parties are not just electoral machines for achieving electoral victories but also function effectively as vehicles for public education, leadership training, national integration and skills acquisition during inter-election years.

This is especially the case in Ghana where the Constitution imposes heavy responsibilities on political parties by requiring them to "shape the political will of the people, disseminate information on political ideas, social and economic programmes of a national character, and sponsor candidates for elections to any public office other than to District Assemblies or lower local government units" (Article 55 (3)).

If political parties are to play their roles effectively in Ghana's multi-party democracy, then their funding must be of concern to the state. This is especially the case as the Political Parties Act, 2000 (Act 574) imposes stringent duties and responsibilities on political parties – in terms of their sources of revenue, financial reporting and accountability.

However, the only sources of public financial support currently available for political parties are the following:

- Indirect support by not subjecting the incomes of political parties to tax;
- Direct support by the allocation of a few vehicles in election years to political parties participating in the elections through the Electoral Commission.

It is against this background that the IEA/ Ghana Political Parties Programme (GPPP) initiated a move to have enacted a Public Funding of Political Parties Act that will provide state and other public financial support for political parties in Ghana.

In furtherance of this initiative, the IEA/GPPP prepared the initial proposals for the Bill. Thereafter a legal consultant in the person of Professor Kofi Kumado, a Professor of Law at the University of Ghana and Director of the Legon Centre for International Affairs (LECIA) was commissioned to prepare a Draft Bill on Public Funding of Political Parties. The Draft Bill was subjected to nationwide stakeholder consultations. Two separate workshops were also held in Kumasi and Accra at which various recommendations for amendments were made. The major proposals were the following:

- A Board of the Political Parties Fund comprising representatives of the political parties should be established to be responsible for policy issues, while the Electoral Commission is made responsible for the day-to-day management and administration of the Fund;
- Consultations should be held with Ghana's development partners to reach agreement on the proposed major source of revenue into the Fund, which is a percentage of the VAT;
- The general public should be sensitised to the proposed use of the VAT for the purposes of the Fund in order not to risk public protests;
- Provisions that have the effect of exerting Government control of the Fund should be removed as the Fund should be seen as one set up by the political parties for the political parties;
- Independent candidates should not benefit from the use of the Fund.

Some of the above proposals have been incorporated into the revised Draft Bill.

The final proposed Draft Bill has the following as its major features:

- The establishment of a Political Parties Fund;
- The principal source of money for the Fund is two and half percent of the total tax revenue of Ghana;
- The Fund is to be administered by the Electoral Commission;
- A formula for the disbursement of the Fund comprising reimbursement for electoral expenses and general administration;
- A provision to encourage political parties to field women candidates in elections;
- The Fund is exempted from tax;
- Provision is made for annual audit of the Fund and annual reports to Parliament.

The proposed Draft Bill has been accepted by the four political parties which form the GPPP and was signed in attestation at a public ceremony held on 10th October 2007. The Electoral Commission has also accepted to manage and administer the Fund once the Bill is passed into law. The Draft Bill has been submitted to the Attorney General with a request for sponsoring it to Cabinet and Parliament for enactment. Indeed, former President Professor John Atta Mills in his 2009 State of the Nation Address, commended the IEA for its work and pledged to consider the Draft Bills initiated by the Institute including the Public Funding of Political Parties Bill. In 2012, the then Vice President, John Mahama, also re-emphasised government's consideration of the above Bill, during his keynote speech at the IEA's commemoration of the Presidential Transition Act.

With the finalisation of the Draft Public Funding of Political Parties Bill, The IEA/GPPP has once again played a model role in consolidating and entrenching Ghana's democracy. It is hoped that with the passage of the Bill into law, and the consequent establishment of the Political Parties Fund, political parties will be strengthened to play their proper roles in multi-party constitutional governance in Ghana.

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM TO THE PROPOSED DRAFT BILL

ON PUBLIC FUNDING OF POLITICAL PARTIES

INTRODUCTION

Political parties are clearly considered to be critical to the political and constitutional process in Ghana. This is evidenced by Articles 21(3), 54 and 56 of the Constitution. In many parts of the world, the recognition of political parties as important pillars of constitutional democracy is concretised by the provision of state financial support for the operation of political parties. In Africa, mention may be made of South Africa, Zimbabwe and Mali.

Ghana provides some state support for political parties at the moment. But there is a general feeling that the state should do more. This is especially so given the stringent financial reporting regime established by the Political Parties Act, 2000 (Act 574), which creates costs for political parties.

The Public Funding of Political Parties Bill is in response to this need.

Structure of the Bill

The Bill is organised into two parts. Part I deals with establishment issues. Part II addresses administrative, financial and related issues.

Main Features of the Bill

Clause 3 of the Bill lays down the sources of money for the Fund. The principal source of money for the Fund will be VAT. The formulation follows the standard practice on the establishment of Funds by Parliament (see for example, section 3(a) of the Ghana Education Trust Fund Act, 2000 (Act 581)).

Under the Political Parties Act, 2000 (Act 574), foreigners, whether within or outside Ghana, are prohibited from contributing financially or otherwise to political parties. Clause 3(c) makes a slight departure from this rule by opening up the possibility of foreigners contributing to the Fund. The risks associated with contributions to individual political parties, which informs the prohibition, is considered minimised by such a relaxation.

Clause 4 provides for the Fund to be administered by the Electoral Commission. This hardly needs any justification. In any event, if justification were needed, two might suffice. First, administration by the national electoral body is consistent with best practice all over the world. Second, the Electoral Commission already administers the existing state support for political parties. The Clause maintains the independence of the Electoral Commission. Clause 3 is supplemented by Clause 9 which allows the Commission, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, to recover all administrative costs it incurs in the administration of the Fund.

Clause 5 makes the usual provisions for the vesting of the moneys accruing to the Fund in the Commission; for the money to be lodged in bank accounts and for the investment of unspent balances in any financial year.

The procedures and the principles governing the allocation of moneys to political parties are contained in Clause 6. The Clause operates on the principle of equality of all political parties registered under the appropriate law. However, the principles also specify conditions to be satisfied by a political party before it can access the Fund as well as the purposes for which the moneys may or may not be put.

Two main categories of financial assistance are provided for by Clause 6 namely, reimbursement of electoral expenses and general administration. General administration is to account for 20% of the moneys available to the Fund in any financial year (January 1 to December 31). This is to be allocated equally to all political parties provided they satisfy other requirements in this Bill or any other law; for example, the obligation to file financial statements with the Electoral Commission and to maintain a certain measure of physical presence throughout the country.

Electoral reimbursement accounts for the remainder i.e. 80%. However, this remainder is broken into Presidential and Parliamentary Elections as well as the number of seats a political party has in Parliament. Provision is also made here for those contesting elections as independent candidates.

Clause 6 contains two principles worth highlighting. First, the threshold for being eligible for reimbursement of electoral expenses. The Clause pegs this at 2% of the votes cast in the election which is being used as the basis for the allocation to the political parties. In other words, a political party must obtain at least 2% of the total votes actually cast (not of registered voters). From comparative data, the eligibility threshold ranges between 1% - 5%. The 2% provided in Clause 6 is based on the results of the 1992, 1996, 2000 and 2004 elections and also on the belief that the threshold should not be fixed based on the registered voters only but should also take into consideration the total national population represented by elected officials.

The regulation of bye-elections is left to the Commission. No provision is made for candidates elected unopposed because it is assumed they will have no electoral expenses. For this purpose, it must be understood that the philosophy underlying the Bill assumes that the election commences with the filing of nomination papers.

Another principle is the setting aside of 10% of the Fund to encourage political parties to field women candidates and do so in constituencies where they are likely to be elected. To make the encouragement meaningful, it is provided in Clause 7 that a political party must elect at least 30 women Members of Parliament to qualify for a share of this 10%.

Clause 8 deals with the management of the funds allocated to a political party and the reporting obligations thereon.

Clause 10 exempts the Fund from tax. This is consistent with other Funds established by law.

Clause 11 makes provision for the Fund to be audited annually by the Auditor-General.

Clause 12 obliges the Commission to report annually to Parliament.

Clause 14 gives the Commission the power to regulate the allocation of moneys to political parties.

Consistent with other legislation affecting political parties, Clause 15 provides a right of appeal by a political party up to the Court of Appeal against any decision of the Commission. The Clause provides a three-tier decision-making process which should be adequate (i.e. Commission, High Court and Court of Appeal).

The purpose of Clause 16 is to achieve consistency and mutual reinforcement of legislation relating to political parties.

Clause 18 provides for a prospective commencement date of the Bill when enacted. This is to create a level field for all political parties and to avoid creating the impression that the Bill favours or is intended to favour any particular political party or parties.
